Automatic Takedowns:

How ContentID Has Changed Copyright Enforcement

Ever since the landmark Viacom v. YouTube case, which ruled that the DMCA “safe-harbor” provisions protected internet service providers from copyright infringement liability, popular online platforms have come up with innovative ways to enforce and protect copyrighted works. The first and most controversial of which is ContentID, an automatic digital fingerprinting system that detects copyright infringements and either blocks the video, allows viewing of statistics, or adding advertisements to the infringing video, the proceeds of which go to the content owner. However, ContentID and other analogous automated systems have also been the subject of criticism. Join us in November as we talk with expert attorneys concerning digital fingerprinting systems, their criticisms, and what to look forward to in the years to come

November 10th @ 5:00 PM. Room 423.

This program of one online panel is approved for up to 1.0 transitional/non-transitional New York State CLE credits in the category “Areas of Professional Practice.” To receive CLE credits for a panel, you must attend that part of the program “live.” We cannot award CLE credits for watching a recorded version of any part of this program
